The king announced that among all the young mice, the one who made the best soup from a sausage skewer during the year would become his wife. Only four poor mice dared to accept the challenge: they all went off by themselves, ready to do anything to make the best soup! Now Louis must get to know his son while dodging the pistol whips, bullets, and car bombs that come with trying to prove his brother's innocence. The old spy insists on helping with the case and displays an unnerving penchant for escalation. The owners of a local soup restaurant may want Louis dead. That same soup restaurant sponsors Louis's son's Little League team, the one Louis now coaches. The players don't respect his authority- or much of anything. They treat practices like roasts and get ejected from games. Louis's son thinks they're great. Stone Soup Jan 26 2021 Read Along or Enhanced eBook: Two hungry travelers arrive at a village expecting to find a household that will share a bit of food, as has been the custom along their journey. To their surprise, villager after villager refuses to share, each one closing the door with a bang. As they sit to rest beside a well, one of the travelers observes that if the townspeople have no food to share, they must be "in greater need than we are." With that, the travelers demonstrate their special recipe for a magical soup, using a stone as a starter. All they need is a carrot, which a young girl volunteers. Not to be outdone, another villager contributes a potato, and the soup grows as others bring corn, celery, and other vegetables and seasonings. In this cumulative retelling of an ancient and widely circulated legend, author Heather Forest shows us that when each person makes a small contribution, "the collective impact can be huge." Susan Gaber's paintings portray the optimism and timelessness of a story that celebrates teamwork and generosity
